KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS

Leading Catholic prelates and laymen from cities and towns bordering San Francisco Bay met in San Mateo Sunday to participate in the fifth anniversary celebration of San Mateo Council No. 1345, Knights of Columbus. Members of the order living on the peninsula attended in large numbers. The festivities closed at night with a banquet at the Peninsula hotel in honor of Bishop Hanna of San Francisco.

The day was filled with receptions to distinguished visitors, outdoor entertainment, the conferring of degrees and the renewal of tne ties of brotherhood and friendship.

The festivities began at 10:45 o'clock, when a special train brought guests from San Francisco. Headed by the League of the Cross Cadet band, the visiting Knights and a large body of San Mateo county members marched to St. Matthews church, where high mass was celebrated. Rev T. J. O'Connell delivered the sermon.

At noon a barbecue was served in the grounds of the First avenue grammar school.

The ritualistic work of San Mateo council took place in the afternoon. The second degree was conferred by Past Deputy Neal Power and State Deputy Frank Silva, assisted by the state team. The third degree was given also.

In the class of 68 candidates were:

Thomas A. Driscoll, Captain A. H. Payson, Christian de Guigne Jr., John S. Graham, William H. Brown, J. J. Hastings, John P. Daly, J. J. McGrath and J. Racey Biven. San Mateo; Father John F. Casey, E. S. Fay and L. Collins, Burlingame; Father George Lacombe and William Murray, Menlo Park; Father Joseph M. Gleason and R. V. Gilchrist, Palo Alto; Peter McCormick, Gakland, and Dr. A. J. McKinnon, Rio Vista.

During the afternoon the visiting ladies were given a reception.

This was Bishop Hanna's first official visit to San Mateo.

At the banquet Joseph Scott, the labor leader of Los Angeles, made the address in behalf of the Knights of Columbus. Joseph S. Tobin of Hillsborough spoke for the Catholic residents of San Mateo county.

The committee of arrangements was as follows: Joseph F. Killelea, James T. O'Keefe, F. Partmann, J. J. Hahir, Daniel Flynn, George A. Deleau, Rev. James A. Grant, George A. Gadd, J. B. Ruegg and Raymond K. O'Grady.

The following represented officially their respective parishes at the banquet:

Judge A. McSweeney, South San Francisco; B. Bill, San Bruno; the Rev. J. A. Grant, James R. Murphy, James Madden and G. J. McGregor, Burlingame; Joseph Sadoc Tobin and Walter Martin, Hillsborough; the Rev. J. Dugan, J. E. Casey, J. B. Ruegg, Edwin Tobin and R. O'Grady, San Mateo; J. H. Hahir, P. A. Ryan, the Rev. J. J. Sullivan and William King, Redwood City; the Rev, J. B. Hannigan, D. E. O'Keefe, A. Gale, James T. O'Keefe, John Morey and J. B. Kelly, Menlo Park; the Rev. Joseph M. Gleason.

The Record has always maintained that it is the duty of people living out here to patronize our business houses for the reason that their success means the general betterment of the community, a thing that all loyal citizens are interested in. If an entertainment of any nature is being arranged, our business people are the first ones to be solicited for assistance and it is often a fact that the solicitors never patronize their home business, but go to the city and trade with people who would actually laugh at them if they were asked to buy a ticket or give two bits to a charitable entertainment out here. It is not quite consistent either, for people who get up dances or entertainments, to have their printing done in the city and expect the people to patronize their grafts, when the local newspaper, the most potent factor in any community for its upbuilding, is completely ignored, save, in some cases the solicitation of the editor to buy a rat-printed ticket and a request to give the affair a big free write-up.

☞The honest way to discontinue a subscription to a newspaper is to first pay the small amount you owe. Thus you will retain the respect of the editor and guard your own peace of mind. To do otherwise, such as ordering the postmaster to notify the publisher that the paper is "refused" is cowardly. *

THE SUPERVISORS

SAN MATEO COUNTY SOLONS

The adjourned meeting of the Board of Supervisors met Monday with all members present.

Professors S. P. McCrea of the Sequoia High Sthool and Wm. J. Savage of the Jefferson Schools, were unanimously elected to succeed themselves as members of the county board of education.

A telegram was received from the Harris Trust and Savings Bank of Chicago, saying they would consider the purchase of the $352,000 road bonds, if satisfactorily discounted. Filed.

The matter of the survey of the state road, in which Santa Clara county asked this county to share expense, was continued.

The report of the committee on the Los Angeles-San Francisco auto race on July 4, that a 30-mile-per-hour limit must be maintained, was by motion accepted.

After some discussion a resolution was unanimonsly passed changing Section 1 of the game ordinance, relative to deer, to make the open season from July 1 to August 31.

The selling of the county road bonds to the amount of $352,000, resulted in one bid for $25,000 of them at par, from Ant. Borel & Co., San Francisco. Continuee to July 7.

The San Mateo school bonds matter was also continued.

The case of Mrs. Ceoni, 221 Los Angeles avenue, Daly City, reported in last stages of tuberculosis and also as giving birth to a child Sunday night, was referree to Supervisor Casey with power to act.

Myseli-Rollins' proof of road bonds approved and lithograpuing ordered.

Supervisor MacBain and Surveyor Neuman authorized to survey a portion of La Honea road with view to change its course.

Plans and specifications for a long bridge near San Gregorio approved and advertising for bids ordered.

Plans and specifications for a reinforced concrete bridge on the School street extension to the ocean, west of Colma, approved and advertising for bids ordered.

Surveyor ordered to prepare plans and specifications for two bridges in Fifth District and Supervisor Blackburn ordered to repair one bridge.

Surveyor Neuman advised that much can be saved if the bridges are more carefully cared for.

Supervisors Brown and MacBain were empowered to purchase certain supplies.

Supervisor Casey presented a request from the Board of Education, asking that County Superintendent of Schools, Roy W. Cloud, be sent to the National Convention of County School Superintendents. to be hele next week in Salt Lake City, Utah. The matter of expenses was referred to Acting District Attorney O'Keefe, who stated that while there was no law authorizing it, there was also no law to prohibit payment of expenses. Mr. Cloud was called and stated that he was not making the request but that the Board of Education had urged him to attend, for the reason that there will be an effort made at the convention to have the next session held in California in 1915. He said his expenses would be about $45 for transportation and hotel expenses in Salt Lake at $4 a day for six days.

By motion Mr. Clond was authorized to attend with expenses as above and that he be granted a leave of absence of 30 days beginning July 5. Chairman Brown said that while he was not sure it was wholly legal, he would vote yes for the reason that he considered it worth more than the cost as an advertisement to San Mateo county to be renresented.

HOLIDAY PROCLAMATION

The Governor of California Has Officially Proclaimed Satursay, July 5, as a Legal Day of Rest.

Next Saturday will be a holiday. Governor Hiram W. Johnson having issued the proclamation declaring the day rollowing the Fourth of July to be a legal holiday in the State of California. The following proclamation was issued by the Governor:

Whereas, the 4th day of July, A. D. 1913 (being by law a legal holiday) will fall upon Friday, and many requests have been received by me from numerous citizens throughout the State to declare the day following also a day of rest from labor, and it appears to be the general desire of the citizens of California in the different vocations of life that the day following the nation's anniversary, to wit, Saturday, the 5th day of July, A. D. 1913, should be declared a legal holiday.

Now, therefore, I, Hiram W. Johnson, as Governor of the State of California, do hereby proclaim the 5th day of July, A. D. 1913, a legal holiday.

(Signed)

HIRAM W. JOHNSON,
Governor.

San Bruno Items

By the Yellow Critic.

Supt. Ahrens of this division of the S. P., visited San Bruno this week and had a "heart-to-heart" talk with several of our citizens. He listened to the need of outlets of the Fifth Addition residents across S. P. Track 10 and from the County road and agreed that such crossings were necessary. When a new depot was mentioned he sidestepped the question, without expressing himself one way or the other.

Jack Oswell of Huntington has recovered from his accident and resumed blacksmithing in South City.

Mr. Madson of the Third Addition has been seriously ill, but is now able to be about.

Mr. and Mrs. Pierson, opposite the postoffice, are building a new fence around their well cultivated home that is both useful and ornamental.

Mr. Short, a San Francisco business man, was looking over San Bruno this week.

Miss Spotswood of Huntington journeyed to the city to enjoy her birthday this week.

Mrs. J. O'Connor and daughters paid Mr. O'Connor's parents, who live in Oakland, a visit this week.

The Fifth Addition Improvement Club is making good headway before the Railroad Commissioners to have two streets opened over the tracks of the S. P.

Hensley Smith have made application to South San Francisco for water service for Los Critas.

All who see your San Mateo Index and Daly City Record agree they are hummers.

It is wonderful some of the interesting talks some of our citizens could make if they would. For instance, Geo. Sneath might tell of the early days of the Jersey farm; the Silveys could tell how they have seen their holdings grow from a cow pasture to the dignity of city lots; Mr. Lombardi might tell how it feels to butt into a Southern Pacific engine; Joe Smith might tell the public how to farm for both pleasure and profit; Andy Burk might tell his secret of how to be a good fellow to all comers, and Doc. Smith might tell us how to be a successful mixer, and so on.

GAME LAWS.

Ducks—October 15th to March 1st, 50 per week.

Quail—October 15th to February 15th, 20 per day.

Dove—August 1st to October 15th. 50 per day.

Deer (buck only)—July 1st to September 1st, 2 in season

Rabbits—July 31st to February 1st 15 per day.

Mountain trout—Hook and line only, 50 per day, not over 10 lbs. and 1 fish—April 1st to November 1st.

Steelhead trout—50 per day, April 1st to November 1st.

Abalone (for food only)—15 per day, July 1st to March 1st; red 17 inches in circumference. Abalone must be brought to shore.

STRIKE OF THE PRESSFEEDERS

The printing industry of San Francisco is in a chaotic condition because of the press feeders strike and from present indications there is no telling where or when the trouble will end. The following article from the Labor Clarion will give a general outline of the situation:

"Last November the Press Feeders and Assistants' Union opened up negotiations with the Franklin Printing Trades Association looking to an increase in the wage scale. These negotiations were carried on month after month with but little progress, but the feeders patiently continued, with the hope that an amiceable adjustment might be reached, until last Thursday, when they voted to strike on Monday of this week. if the employers continue to refuse to make any concessions.

"In the mean time the officers of the Labor Council had endeavored to bring about an understanding and agreement between the feeders and the association of employing printers, but with no more success than had crowned the efforts of the feeders themselves.

"The Allied Printing Trades Council appointed a committee for the purpose of arranging a peaceful adjustment of the difficulty. This committee consulted the employers first, then visited the feeders and secured concessions from them, with which they returned to the employers. The committee of employers had practically agreed to proceed upon the basis of the proposition offered by the feeders for a settlement through the conciliation committe of the Allied Printing Trades Council, when Secretary Roantree of the Frankiin Printing Trades Association requested that the committee representing that organization retire for a secret conference upon the question. After about twenty minutes the association committee returned and announced that no concessions whatever would be made, even as a basis for negotiation. The Allied Printing Trades Committee then suggested arbitration of the wage scale as a means of preserving the peace. This the employers refused, stating they could not arbitrate the question of wages.

"For this condition of affairs the man Roantree seems almost entirely responsible. Roantree is also secretary of the recently organized Employers' Federation and the author of the scheme to delay the operation of the compensation act passed by the last Legislature by circulating referendum petitions. He seems determined to throw the printing industry into a bitter fight, even though unreasonableness of a brazen sort be necessary in order to accomplish his purpose."

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE BIBLE STUDY ON

MOSES, THE GOODLY CHILD.

Exodus 1:22—2:10.—July 6.

"Whoso receiveth one such little child in My name, receiveth Me." —Matthew 18:5.

JOSEPH was the Grand Vizier of Egypt for eighty years—dying at the age of one hundred and ten years. Surely the Israelites suffered no oppression during that time. Shortly thereafter, however, another Pharaoh came into power who "knew not Joseph"—who ignored his services to Egypt and the tentative covenant with the Israelites. This Pharaoh is supposed to have been Rameses II., a hard-hearted, selfish despot.

This Pharaoh perceived that the Israelites were multiplying much more rapidly than were the Egyptians. Therefore he considered them a menace. At first they had been viewed as a protection, because Goshen lay eastward, and an invading army would encounter the Israelites first. Egypt's only antagonist in those days was Assyria. When the Israelites would outnumber the Egyptians, an invading army might bribe them, and thus the rule of the Pharaohs be overthrown.

"Taskmasters to Afflict Them."

To meet this contingency, various expedients were tried. First, an edict compelled the Israelites to perform arduous labors, which it was hoped would undermine their strength. On the contrary, they seemed to flourish increasingly with every burden. The next repressive measure was the edict that every male child of the Israelites should be strangled at birth. But this command was disregarded, the midwives claiming that they arrived too late. The final resort was the royal edict that the Israelites must drown every new-born male infant. Failure to do this was made a punishable crime.

It was under these conditions that Moses was born. The account indicates that both his parents were pious, and hence we are not surprised that the babe "was a goodly child"—beautiful. Comparatively few parents realize that where children are otherwise than "goodly"—graceful in feature and character—a responsibility for the defects rests upon them. We do not mean that any human pair could bring forth absolutely perfect children. "Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean?"—Job 14:4.

What we mean is that as careful breeding affects the form, features and character of the lower animals, and improves both fruit and flowers, so also it is potent in respect to humanity. Parents have in their own control the most wonderful power whereby to influence the character and form of their children before birth, and not to be ignored after birth—the power of the mind. Were this law of nature clearly recognized by intelligent, conscientious people, what a change would speedily be effected!

Co-operating With God's Providences.

Doubtless Moses' parents thought how to advance the plan which proved so successful in saving his life. They knew that the Egyptian princess resorted to a certain secluded spot on the Nile for her bath, presumed to have been part of a religious ceremony. A little basket was woven of bulrushes, and made watertight with pitch. The babe was placed therein, and at a proper time was left near the spot visited by the princess. Moses' little sister Miriam stood near, ready to suggest the bringing of a nurse. It is quite possible that the princess perceived the ruse, and merely co-operated, believing that the child might as well have the mother's care.

Aided and Protected.

How much there is of wonderful romance in this story! Think of the leadings of Divine providence in this case! One day the child Moses is a danger in his parents' home. At any moment his presence might be discovered, and he would be killed. Possibly his parents would also be put to death for disobeying the royal edict. The next day, through Divine providence, the child is back in the same home, and his mother paid by the princess for caring for him.

The Princess finds Moses.

It is assumed that the child was weaned at the age of four years. Then he was claimed by the princess as her own. He was given the name Moses, of which Professor Sayce says: "The Greek form of the Hebrew Mosheh—Moyses—is derived by Josephus from the Coptic (ancient Egyptian) Mo (water) and uses (saved out of it). In other words, the princess made a pun of the name, as though she had said: 'This is my son, because I brought him forth—out of the water.'"

Truly, we never know when Divine Wisdom is working human woof into the Divine web, or plan. God's people are ever to remember that He is "working all things according to the counsel of His own will." While using human instrumentalities, God nevertheless respects the human will, and merely co-operates with it. And whoever most zealously co-operates with God receives proportionately the larger share of the Divine blessing. This simple lesson, received into good and honest hearts, gives us greater faith in God.

Cookery Points

Cherry Shortcake.

For cherry shortcake make a soft dough by mixing together two cupfuls of flour sifted with a heaping teaspoonful of baking powder, a teaspoonful of salt and half a cupful of shortening, which may be half each of butter and lard or bacon fat. Add two tablespoonfuls of sugar and mix with a well beaten egg. Add enough milk to make the dough of the right consistency. Roll out in two layers and bake in the same pan with flecks of butter between.

When baked the two layers will separate easily. The cherry filling should be in readiness to spread between the shortcake and on top. Large ripe cherries are pitted and crushed slightly in a bowl with sugar. Taste the juice to tell if it is sweet enough. Prepare the cherries some time ahead and you will find them much nicer. Serve with or without whipped cream.

Frozen Fruits.

Combination of fruit flavors will often bring about cooling and delicious results. Peaches and plums combine perfectly and frozen in a sugar sirup yield a most delightful sweet. Boil one quart of water with one pound of sugar until they form a rich sirup, then strain and stand aside until cold. Pare twelve fine ripe peaches and chop fine with a silver knife. Scald one pint of plums, remove the skins and the stones, mash the pulp and add to the peaches. Crack the pits to remove the kernels, blanch and pound. Add the fruit and the mashed kernels to the sirup. Let it stand for thirty minutes and then freeze.

Blackberry Jam Cake.

Rub to a cream half a cupful of butter and then gradually add one cupful of sugar, the beaten yolks of three eggs and the whites of two, reserving the third white for frosting. Take half a cupful of thin cream or milk, a level teaspoonful each of cinnamon, allspice and two scant cupfuls of flour, and last of all stir in one cupful of blackberry jam or preserves. Bake in moderately hot oven for about three-quarters of an hour. This makes a nice pudding if eaten as soon as baked and a currant jelly or lemon sauce is served with it.

Gold and Silver Omelet.

Have ready as many eggs as there are people to be served. Separate the yolks from the whites and beat each thoroughly, then add to each a dash of salt and pepper or paprika and a little milk. Pour both egg mixtures simultaneously into the pan, letting the white omelet cover one-half of the bottom and the gold omelet the other half. Cook them gently until firm throughout, taking care that they do not burn. Then fold the white or silver one over on to the other and serve immediately.

Souffle Glace.

Half a pint of cream, one tablespoonful of grated lemon rind, four eggs, half a pound of sugar, half a gill of wine, one tablespoonful of lemon juice and a pinch of salt. Mix the yolks of the eggs, lemon juice, lemon rind, sugar and salt. Stir over a slow fire until thick. Cool. Add the whites of eggs, well beaten, and the cream, beaten until stiff. Add the wine, fill the mixture into paper cases, pack in a pail and pack the pail in ice and salt for four hours.

Burnt Almond Ice Cream.

Blanch and chop half a pint of almonds. Cook four tablespoonfuls of sugar to the caramel; add the chopped almonds. When cold pound to a powder. Put one pint of milk into a saucepan with half a pound of sugar and the yolks of four eggs. Stir over a slow fire until it coats the spoon; then strain and cool. Add one pint of whipped cream, a pinch of salt, one teaspoonful of almond extract and the pounded almonds. Freeze.

Grape Cup.

Pour half a cupful of boiling water over four tablespoonfuls of grape jelly and stir until dissolved. Add the same quantity of cold water, one tablespoonful of sugar and a little lemon juice.

Place a lump of ice in a glass pitcher and pour the liquid over. Any kind of jelly will answer if the grape is not at hand. If currant jelly is used then less lemon juice will be required, currants being rather tart.

Summer Sandwich.

Cucumber and green pepper minced fine and seasoned with mayonnaise make as tasty a hot weather sandwich as it is easy to find. If the sandwiches are not to be used at once the juice should be squeezed from the vegetables after they are minced, for otherwise the bread will become water soaked.

For Afternoon Tea.

To vary the afternoon iced tea drop a sprig or two of fresh mint into the pot with the dry tea and turn the boiling water over it. A bit of the crisp, fresh mint in each glass looks refreshing on a hot afternoon.

New Wrinkle For Potato Salad.

Instead of onion, try mixing the potato salad with cucumbers cut in small pieces. Onions may be used, too, but unless the quantity is small the flavor of the potato and cucumber blend will be lost.

An Insult Avenged

A Story For the Fourth of July

By MARIAN WILSON

"Grandpa, tell us a story for the Fourth of July."

"You'll have to go to some one younger than I for a story about celebrating the Fourth of July, but if you want one about what we celebrate I can give it to you."

"What do you mean by that?"

"The Fourth of July is celebrated to commemorate our becoming a nation and not a colony of Great Britain. Our independence was achieved by the Revolutionary war. I will tell you of an incident of that war.

"One evening during the period of the American Revolution a young British officer rode up to a house in northern New Jersey and, dismounting, went to the door and knocked. In that day the colonies, or the eastern states, were like rural England. Many of the most aristocratic families of New York lived in country homes within, say, fifty miles of the city, and it was at one of these houses that the young officer stopped.

"His summons was answered by a negro servant, whom he directed to ask his mistress if he could have some supper. The negro disappeared, and presently there was a rustle of skirts on the winding staircase, and a tall girl of dignified mien appeared before the stranger. He doffed his hat to her with all the bearing of a young marquis and said:

"'I am on my way to join our forces at Monmouth. I have had nothing to eat all day and would be very thankful for something that will stay my hunger.'

"The girl, with no less grace than his, invited him into the living room and told him that if he would wait a few minutes she would have something prepared for him. Presently the colored servant reappeared and invited him into the dining room. There at the table behind a silver urn sat the girl who had admitted him, while before her were the dishes that constituted the supper.

"'Really,' the officer said, 'this kindness overwhelms me.'

"'You are an enemy,' she said, 'but you are hungry, and I would not deny you meat and drink. And, giving you such, I treat you for the time being as a guest. Will you have coffee?'

"'Thanks, Mistress'—

"'I am Dorothy Hale.'

"There was something high bred about the girl to excite the admiration of the young scion of a noble house in England. But the English nobleman of that day was not overscrupulous in his dealings with his own countrywomen, and as for one who lived 3,000 miles from court he had no conscience whatever. Indeed, the courtliness of Mistress Dorothy Hale was but an incentive to a conquest. Having finished his repast, he arose and, laying down his napkin, said:

"'Mistress Hale, I feel myself restricted from offering you payment for the delicious repast you have given me, but I cannot go away without in some way showing my appreciation of your kindness.' With that he stepped up to her, put his arms about her and kissed her.

"When he saw the red flush he had called to her cheek, the flash of fire in her eye, he knew he had made a mistake. He stammered a few words of apology, to which she made no reply, and, backing himself out of the room, went to where he had left his horse and rode away.

"He had gone perhaps a mile when he heard behind him the sound of a galloping horse. It occurred to him that the rider was coming with some message connected with the insult he had offered his benefactress and judged that he might be called to account for what he had done. But he was no coward and was ready to pay for the kiss he had taken in any coin required. So, instead of pushing on, he drew rein and waited for the approaching horseman, who, when he came up, proved to be a negro boy.

"'Missy Dorothy tole me to gib yo' dat,' he said, handing the young man a bit of folded paper on which were a few words, as follows:

"Sir—You have insulted a defenseless woman who gave you meat and drink. My brother will be at home this evening and will expect satisfaction in the wood back of the house at sunrise tomorrow morning.

"'Tell your mistress,' said the officer, 'that I must doubtless give the rebel General Washington satisfaction tomorrow or soon after, and if I am spared to return to her I will do so as soon as I can get a leave of absence. But tell her I would rather meet her friend or her lover than her brother, for I would not injure her for King George's dominions.'

"With that he turned his horse's head in the direction he had been going, and the boy went back to his mistress.

"Within a few days General Washington attacked General Howe, who was marching from Philadelphia to New York, Washington hoping to prevent him from reaching his destination. But General Charles Lee, who, it had recently been discovered, had turned traitor to the American cause, disobeyed orders and rendered Washington's plan fruitless.

"A couple of weeks after the battle Mistress Dorothy Hale was sitting on the porch of her father's house when a redcoat came riding along the road and drew rein before the gate.

"'Mistress Hale,' he said, 'I have come to give you satisfaction through your champion, whoever he may be, but I beg you to spare me a meeting with your own brother.'

"He was about to dismount and come up to join her, but she arose and stood looking down upon him as a figure of justice regarding a criminal and forbade his entrance. Then she noticed that he was very pale.

"'You do not look in condition to fight for your life. Go away and come again when you are stronger.'

"'I am strong enough to fight your brother,' he said, 'for I shall stand only on the defensive.'

"The girl remained silent a moment, then added: 'I presume you have been wounded in the recent battle. An apology will be accepted.'

"'One holding the king's commission cannot apologize in face of a challenge.'

"'Very well,' said the girl; 'go to the wood behind the house, and my brother will join you there.'

"'Does your brother remain at home in these times? One would suppose that a man capable of championing his sister would be fighting on one side or the other.'

"'He was wounded, though slightly, in the battle. He is now quite recovered and is to rejoin his regiment tomorrow—that is, if you do not prevent his doing so.'

"The officer reluctantly tethered his horse to a post before the gate and walked around the house to the wood in rear. There he waited half an hour when he saw a man coming in the uniform of a Continental soldier.

"'My sister tells me, sir,' said young Hale, 'that you asked her for supper, she gave it to you with her own hands and you returned her kindness by an insult.'

"'Has not your sister,' said the Englishman, 'some one else than you to champion her? Should I kill you I should fancy that I killed her, so marked is the likeness between you.'

"'We are twins,' said young Hale. 'But enough of talk. Defend yourself!'

"There were no weapons except a sword Hale had brought with him from the house and the sword the officer wore by his side.

"'One moment,' said the latter. 'Should you kill me it will be well for you to know who I am. I am Lieutenant Richard Trevelyan of the —th British foot, second son of the Earl of Angleton.'

"'In case you fall your remains shall be sent to England.'

"'Rather send them to the colonel of my regiment. Were it not that I have but little strength I would not think of taking these precautions against a beardless boy. Now, sir, I am ready.'

"It was not a spirited contest on either side. Hale did not appear to relish it any more than Trevelyan. The latter seemed to fear killing his opponent, while the former grew paler and paler, his thrusts at the same time growing weaker. At last Hale, while parrying a thrust of his enemy, ran the point of his sword into his opponent's coat. Blood followed, and as soon as he saw it Hale threw away his sword and, clasping his hands on his breast, exclaimed:

"'Oh, heavens, I have killed him!'

"Trevelyan looked at him in astonishment. Then, throwing away his sword, he said:

"'You are not a man. You are a woman. You are Miss Dorothy Hale.'

"'Have I killed you?'

"'Killed me! No. You have but broken the skin.'

"He threw open his coat and displayed a wound a few inches long and half an inch deep.

"'Come,' said Dorothy. 'I am avenged.'

"Trevelyan kneeled before her and begged her forgiveness for his conduct, then went with her to the house, where she dressed the wound she had given him.

"When the war was over and the independence of the United States established Trevelyan's regiment was withdrawn to England. Before leaving he made Dorothy Hale more ample amends than the scratch she had inflicted upon him by marrying her and taking her home to England with him."

My Platonic Friend

Or Was It Above Earthly Love?

By F. A. MITCHEL

There is something pleasing in light hearted youth on the threshold of manhood or womanhood, all unconscious of the vicissitudes that flesh is heir to. Such a person I met during a sojourn in Rome. He was about twenty years old, tall, lithe and handsome as Adonis. Indeed, I never looked at him that he did not remind me of the statue of the Apollo Belvedere in the Vatican gallery. He gave the impression the statue gives—that he was about to spring off into space.

I first saw him in the gardens on the Pincian hill. He was standing beside the great basin of the fountain, spattering the water with a light cane with childlike interest. I have compared him to a statue. Perhaps a better comparison would be one on the Capitoline hill, the Faun. While he had the lightness of the former, he had the relaxedness of the latter. I was standing on the opposite side of the basin from him, and he suddenly looked up to take me unawares.

He saw that my whole soul went out to him, not exactly as a woman's would go out to a strong man, but as to a younger brother, for I was twenty-five years old, and my ideal of the man I would marry was some one older, more massive.

Though our stay at the fountain was but for a few minutes, though no word was spoken between us, something told me that two kindred spirits had met and mingled. There is a certain kind of mating between a boy and a girl a few years older than himself that may last well into his manhood. The young man had returned my gaze in kind, his own indicating "I like you." I could understand how he, skimming along the surface of the waters of life like a young bird, would find a companion in a woman four or five years his senior more readily than in a young girl more like himself. And so I thought about him a great deal and wished that I might know him.

"HE SUDDENLY LOOKED UP TO TAKE ME UNAWARES."

But, though I met him again and quite often, there was no way for me to make his acquaintance except by speaking to him without an introduction. I would not have hesitated to do so except that in a country where so much attention is paid to conventional forms I feared to give him an incorrect idea of my status. As for him, doubtless he would have considered addressing me without being duly presented an insult. I presumed he was an Italian, though I did not know.

One day I was walking on the Janiculum, a hill on the same side of the Tiber with St. Peter's, where the land is devoid of buildings and has something of the sylvan appearance about ancient Rome, when, leaning against a tree, I saw the young man who had so impressed me. He had taken a position similar to that of the statue of the Faun in the gallery on the Capitoline hill. For a moment my fancy ran away with me, and I went back in imagination 2,000 years, when fauns and satyrs and such creatures were supposed to inhabit this very hill. On seeing me a pleased expression came over his face—not a smile nor a look of recognition, but simply a sudden ripple of pleasure like a sunny pool stirred by a light breeze.

Our party passed on, leaving the young man behind. We descended the hill toward St. Peter's, which stood out white against the green hills and a little below us, and on reaching the Tiber took a car to our hotel.

One day in company with a friend I rode on the electric railway across the Campania to Frascati, a village in the direction of Alba Longa, from which, tradition says, came the people who first settled Rome. While taking some refreshments at the hotel another car came, and I saw my friend descend from the outside seats. I lost him in the crowd, but when my companion, a woman, and I were climbing the hill back of the hotel, turning, I saw him following us. We wandered about in the country, and I noticed that he never lost sight of us until we had descended.

On returning to Rome, having told what we had done, we were informed that we had taken a great risk. Just beyond where we had gone is a town nearly all the inhabitants of which are criminals. Then for the first time the reason for our being shadowed by the young man was a possible need of protection.

One morning I met with a surprise. I lived in a pension on the fifth floor of a large building on the Esquiline hill. The floors beneath were occupied for different purposes—apartments, studios, music rooms, and the like. I usually descended and ascended by an elevator. But on this occasion, preferring not to wait for it, I walked down the stairs. Coming up between the second and third floors whom should I meet but my young friend. My look of surprise was met by the same pleasurable expression I had seen on his face before. I wished to thank him for his attention to me at Frascati, but he gave me no opportunity, bounding up the stairs so lightly as to seem to be made of air.

I wondered if he lived in the building, and, in order to find out, after that I usually walked downstairs, hoping to meet him when he came up. I did not have to make many such trips before I saw a door opened. He came out and descended the staircase directly ahead of me. This time he did not see me, for he was in haste and did not look back.

Determined to open an acquaintance with him, I resolved that the next time I met him I would drop something. He would pick it up, hand it to me, I would thank him, and in this way the conventional gulf between us would be bridged. An opportunity soon occurred. Entering the building in which I lived, I saw him coming on the street. Instead of taking the elevator, I walked upstairs, and when I heard a footstep behind me I purposely dropped my glove.

Then I heard the comer behind me mounting two steps at a time, and presently a voice beside me said:

"Signorina!"

I turned, and my friend was handing my glove to me. I said, "Thank you very much," whereupon he shook his head mournfully, indicating that he did not understand me. I knew enough Italian to say "Gracia" (thanks) and moved on, but the disappointment in my face was reflected in his.

Those were the first and last words spoken between us. I saw him once more. I had made an engagement to go on one of the many excursions in the environs of Rome, and the only available train left early in the morning. I descended in the elevator, and when I reached the ground floor, hearing a step on the staircase, I turned and saw my friend coming down. He was dressed in a dark suit, his coat buttoned close under his chin, concealing his shirt bosom and even his white collar. He raised his hat and smiled—not a sad smile such as I would have expected had I known the errand on which he was going, but the smile of one who has not yet learned how thin is the crust on which mortals walk and the certainty of breaking through to destruction at last. Indeed, he seemed light hearted as a boy.

Soon after this, yielding to my desire to know him, I asked my landlady, who spoke both English and Italian, to write for me on a bit of paper in Italian some sentences to hand him when I should next meet him. I kept this paper with me always and never went out of or entered the building but I was ready to hand it to him should I meet him.

A week passed, and, though I entered and went out, climbing and descending the stairs, I did not see him. Then one day I received a letter through the mail addressed to Signorina Worthington at the pension where I lived. I opened it and found it written in the Italian language. The signature was unknown to me. Since I could not read it I took it to a friend, who translated it for me. It was as follows:

My Friend—I go to fight a duel. If I live you will never receive this letter; if I die it will be sent you by my second, who has instructions to do so. It is said that there can be no such thing as friendship between the sexes. I have disproved the statement by conceiving a pure affection for you with whom I have no acquaintance. So strong is this feeling within me that I have no desire to love or be loved with a view to marriage. I cannot believe that you will receive this letter, for it does not seem to me that I can ever die any more than that I can grow old. But if you do receive it be assured, dearest signorina, that, though my body perish, my affection for you is eternal.

My reception of the missive was proof that he had fallen. Rome, which till this moment had been full of interest, suddenly became repulsive to me. It seemed typical of the world of change in which we live. What is that gap of time from Augustus to Victor Emmanuel? It seemed to me rather a precipice toward which all Romans have been marching and over whose brink they have been pouring like the waters of a cataract. The Eternal City is rather the city of the dead. Of no other have we such records—of its men and women who shone resplendent for a brief season, then mingled with the oblivion of the past.

I returned to America with a sadness that has never entirely left me—a sadness occasioned by one with whom I had no acquaintance, yet between whom and me there existed a pure affection unalloyed with human attributes. Of all my momentary meetings with him the most vividly remembered is that last, when I saw him on the brink of the chasm, yet as light hearted as a bridegroom going to meet his bride.

JUVENILE FASHIONS.

Belted Waists Replace the Loose Blouse.

MODISH SUIT OF WHITE LINEN.

Well dressed little boys now wear trim suits of linen, serge or mohair with straight, ungathered trousers and loosely cut waist belted in at the waistline.

A very modish suit of white linen with trimmings of blue linen and white braid is pictured here. White buckskin buttoned boots are worn with the suit in the street.

Planning For Summer.

If you are intending to take a pleasure or business trip during the summer try getting pillow and "knapsack" ready now. Cravenetted material is a good choice for the pillow, as it is impervious to occasional wettings and can be laundered, or the pillow may have an extra cover of smooth linen or silk to be slipped over and fastened securely with buttons or snap fasteners.

This should be about half a yard square, with strong straps at the upper corners by which to hang it over the chair top, preventing it from slipping down. The knapsack is just a fit bag, with a stout strap to hold or hang it by, and can be made to sling over the shoulder if desired. It should have a few small pockets on the inside and a flap to fasten down. In this one can carry small necessaries, a book or other articles which a traveler always finds a use for.

Home Hints.

Homemade cakes will be nicer if the flour is put in last.

Whole peppers are better for seasoning soups and sauces than ground pepper.

A teaspoonful of vinegar put into homemade candy keeps it from being sickly sweet.

Nuts when bought ready shelled should be scalded, dried in the oven and put away in glass jars.

Grated cheese over mashed potatoes makes a pleasant change.

Lard is much better to grease cake pans than butter. Butter will burn and cause the cakes to stick and char.

Bananas that are not quite ripe may be baked in their skins for from twenty to thirty minutes and served hot with cream.

When milk, soup or other foods boil over on the stove cover the spot quickly with salt. It will do away with any unpleasant odor.

Busy Summer For Women.

Mrs. Ida Husted Harper will travel abroad this summer, attending the many conventions in which women will take part. She is a delegate to the meeting of the executive committee of the International Council of Women at The Hague and from there will go to Amsterdam to the industrial meeting of the Dutch women.

She will then attend a two days' convention of suffragists at Berlin and afterward attend congresses in Dresden, Prague and Vienna, finally going to Budapest for the week's congress of the International Woman's Suffrage alliance, of which Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt is the president. She and Mrs. Catt will then travel together in Russia, Poland, Turkey and other countries, returning to the United States in October.

Wristband Umbrella.

Don't let your pretty new hat get ruined because of the nuisance of "toting" an umbrella. If you have a wristband umbrella you won't in the least mind carrying it, even when rain is not a certainty, for the leather strap at the end of its abbreviated handle holds its ferrule far from the ground and out of the way of your ankles. Any handle can be adapted to this new fashion. Just take your pet umbrella to the jewelry repairer, show him where you wish the handle amputated and the strap adjusted, and in a few days you will have a hat protector that will never be a bore to carry.

THE SMART NEGLIGEE.

An Enchanting Model of White Crape.

PUFFINGS DECORATE THE NEGLIGEE.

Long, clinging lines are yielding to frivolous puffings, plaitings and frills in my lady's negligee, and this enchanting model of white crepe de chine with trimmings of plaited net and little moss roses is typical of the new styles.

What Not to Do on Vacation.

Don't bathe the feet immediately after a meal. At least two hours should elapse before you enter the water.

Don't bathe in strange waters, especially if you are a poor swimmer. Swift currents and a heavy swell cause many accidents, while rivers are often thick with weeds.

Don't start out on your holiday with a rush. Go easy the first few days or you will return feeling worse than before you went away.

Don't try to cover too much ground afoot or on the cycle. Rest during the hottest hours of the day and do only as much as you can with comfort.

Don't take friends out rowing unless you can manage a boat, and, above all, don't change places once you've started.

Don't let the children paddle late in the evening when it may be getting chilly, as they are likely to catch a cold which will not be shaken off for weeks.

Don't travel with a lot of jewelry. It is quite unnecessary, and thieves are not unknown in boarding houses and hotels, while you may drop a valued gift in some unknown place.

Don't read in the blazing sun. If you take a book with you to the parade or cliff seek out a shady corner where the sun will not fall on the page or get in your eyes. Also don't keep up your reading too long. Give your eyes a rest now and again.

Don't go to a place merely because Smith or Jones went there last year. It may not suit you.

In Street Attire.

This French gown of Dutch blue lansdowne and silver and blue braid trimming has a yoke and long sleeves of gray chiffon mounted over flesh colored net so that while actually not transparent the bodice has an effect of being decidedly so. The gown is a delightful affair for street wear during the warm weather.

GOWN OF DUTCH BLUE.

A Practical Lemon Squeezer.

Lemon squeezers are needed in every season, not alone in summer. A practical squeezer for the kitchen is made of nickel and glass. The part over which the lemon fits is of glass, and the rim into which the juice runs and the holder to catch the seeds are of nickel. It is priced at $2.25, but one that is really as good as this may be had for 35 cents. It is made in the same way, with a seed rim and a mouth from which to pour the juice. These latter are in Japanese Sedji ware, the green pottery which is both durable and attractive.

DALY CITY, CALIFORNIA, JULY 4, 1913

OVER 40,000 passengers patronized the Geary street raiway Sunday, showing the popularity of a municipally owned public utility. The people like to ride on their own cars.

CASHIN is a good name for the superintendent of the Municipal Street Railway. The way he cashed in last month must be gall and wormwood to the opponents of city ownership of public utilities.—San Francisco Star.

THE express companies say that since the inauguration of the Parcel Post they have lost 29 per cent of their small-package business. May they speedily lose the remaining 71 per cent. The express graft has long been a thorn in the public flesh.

POSTMASTER FISK ot San Francisco has tartly refused to resign as requested by the Postmaster General, saying he can "see no reason for resigning." Likely he has forgotten the little incident when a lady clerk in his office made a very serious charge against him. True, he was "whitewashed" by a friendly investigation, but that did not obliterate the facts in the minds of the people.

BLOOM has brought suit in the Superior Court to restrain the trustees of Daly City from the enforcement of the water rate ordinance. He wanted a temporary injunction, but Judge Buck refused it and set the hearing for next Tuesday. That the new ordinance is equiable is manifest from the fact that niether the Crocker Estate or Vista Grande Water Companies have joined Bloom in the suit. They have had their bellies full of Bloomism.

ONLY once during his term of office did we have occasion to criticise Mr. McNab. That was in his conduct of the case of Dr. Samnel Wiess, who had sent a shockingly indecent letter to a young and respectable woman, who happened to be a chorus girl. It was a case akin to white slavery. The District Attorney's duty, of course, was to vigorously prosecute and unsparingly flagelate the dirty dog. Instead of doing so he berated the woman, who had pursued the only proper aud lawful course she could in the matter, saying she was "entitled to no consideration;" that her "chief ambition in life was to see herself clad in tights, on the front page of the daily papers;" and that "her antics on the stage awakened Weiss's passion."—San Francisco Star.

BIBLE STUDY ON

MOSES, THE GOODLY CHILD.
Exodus 1:22—2:10.—July 6.
"Whoso receiveth one such little child in My name, receiveth Me."—Matthew 18:5.

JOSEPH was the Grand Vizier of Egypt for eighty years—dying at the age of one hundred and ten years. Surely the Israelites suffered no oppression during that time. Shortly thereafter, however, another Pharaoh came into power who "knew not Joseph"—who ignored his services to Egypt and the tentative covenant with the Israelites. This Pharaoh is supposed to have been Rameses II., a hard-hearted, selfish despot.

This Pharaoh perceived that the Israelites were multiplying much more rapidly than were the Egyptians. Therefore he considered them a menace. At first they had been viewed as a protection, because Goshen lay eastward, and an invading army would encounter the Israelites first. Egypt's only antagonist in those days was Assyria. When the Israelites would outnumber the Egyptians, an invading army might bribe them, and thus the rule of the Pharaohs be overthrown.

"Taskmasters to Afflict Them."

To meet this contingency, various expedients were tried. First, an edict compelled the Israelites to perform arduous labors, which it was hoped would undermine their strength. On the contrary, they seemed to flourish increasingly with every burden. The next repressive measure was the edict that every male child of the Israelites should be strangled at birth. But this command was disregarded, the midwives claiming that they arrived too late. The final resort was the royal edict that the Israelites must drown every new-born male infant. Failure to do this was made a punishable crime.

It was under these conditions that Moses was born. The account indicates that both his parents were pious, and hence we are not surprised that the babe "was a goodly child"—beautiful. Comparatively few parents realize that where children are otherwise than "goodly"—graceful in feature and character—a responsibility for the defects rests upon them. We do not mean that any human pair could bring forth absolutely perfect children. "Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean?"—Job 14:4.

What we mean is that as careful breeding affects the form, features and character of the lower animals, and improves both fruit and flowers, so also it is potent in respect to humanity. Parents have in their own control the most wonderful power whereby to influence the character and form of their children before birth, and not to be ignored after birth—the power of the mind. Were this law of nature clearly recognized by intelligent, conscientious people, what a change would speedily be effected!

Co-operating With God's Providences.

Doubtless Moses' parents thought how to advance the plan which proved so successful in saving his life. They knew that the Egyptian princess resorted to a certain secluded spot on the Nile for her bath, presumed to have been part of a religious ceremony. A little basket was woven of bulrushes, and made watertight with pitch. The babe was placed therein, and at a proper time was left near the spot visited by the princess. Moses' little sister Miriam stood near, ready to suggest the bringing of a nurse. It is quite possible that the princess perceived the ruse, and merely co-operated, believing that the child might as well have the mother's care.

Aided and Protected.

How much there is of wonderful romance in this story! Think of the leadings of Divine providence in this case! One day the child Moses is a danger in his parents' home. At any moment his presence might be discovered, and he would be killed. Possibly his parents would also be put to death for disobeying the royal edict. The next day, through Divine providence, the child is back in the same home, and his mother paid by the princess for caring for him.

The Princess finds Moses.

It is assumed that the child was weaned at the age of four years. Then he was claimed by the princess as her own. He was given the name Moses, of which Professor Sayce says: "The Greek form of the Hebrew Mosheh—Moyses—is derived by Josephus from the Coptic (ancient Egyptian) Mo (water) and uses (saved out of it). In other words, the princess made a pun of the name, as though she had said: 'This is my son, because I brought him forth—out of the water.'"

Truly, we never know when Divine Wisdom is working human woof into the Divine web, or plan. God's people are ever to remember that He is "working all things according to the counsel of His own will." While using human instrumentalities, God nevertheless respects the human will, and merely co-operates with it. And whoever most zealously co-operates with God receives proportionately the larger share of the Divine blessing. This simple lesson, received into good and honest hearts, gives us greater faith in God.

Mrs. Eloise S. d'Velez, the well known and efficient teacher, returned Monday from her trip to Spain, where she went about two months ago to settle an estate in which she is the principle legatee.

Mrs. Hazel C. Russell, Daly City's efficient postmistress, will spend the week's end at with friends in Vallejo, accompanied by her husband. During her absence Mrs. Duffy will have charge of the post office.

A party consisting of Mrs. Peter Keller and her two children, Elvera and Robert, and Misses Rena Zarr and Grace Collins, left Thursday morning for Haywards and expect to be gone about three months.

Mrs. Eliza Cecconi, 221 Los Angeles avenue, who was in the last stages of tuberculosis, and gave birth to a child at 6 o'clock Monday morning, died twelve hours later, aged 29 years. The funeral took place Wednesday and the remains were laid to rest in the Italian cemetery.

Last Sunday an automobile returning from a funeral at a high rate of speed, came to grief in Daly City by running into a rut caused by the street work that is being done. A spring was broken and one occupant, F. Martini by name, was so badly bruised that he had to call on Dr. Marion for temporary treatment.

Adolf Frey was awarded the contract for the improvement of the grounds surounding the Vista Grande and Crocker school buildings, including the gardening, and concrete retaining walls, and is very actively engaged in the work, so that he expects to have it almost, if not quite completed when vacation ends.

Here is a suggestion to Bloom. A local paper at Moscow, Idaho, tells of a water pipe on the campus of the University of Idaho, located a Moscow, that had two meters, both of which have been read regularly for several years, so that the university has paid double for water used on that portion of the university.

G. F. Hicks, one of the enterprising residents of Hillcrest Drive, is circulating a petition to have sidewalks put in on that street and already has a large number of names. The spirit of street improvements is growing rapidly since we secured the state highway, and it will not be long before Daly City will be noted for its fine streets.

Supervisor Casey is making good his promise to construct the School street road to the ocean. At the supervisors' meeting Monday he had plans and specifications adopted for one of the reinforced concrete bridges that is estimated to cost over $2000 and bids were ordered advertised for its construction. It will not be long before Colma and Daly City will have a direct street to the ocean.

The funeral of Miss Dina Levy, the beloved daughter of Henry and Ida Levy, who died in a San Francisco hospital, early Tuesday morning, from typhoid fever, took place Wednesday afternoon and the remains were laid to rest in Salem cemetery. The deceased was just past 16 years of age, a recent graduate of the schools with high honors, a most estimable young lady and leaves a very large circle of friends to mourn her untimely death.

OLD FAVORITES.

WINTER NIGHT.

SILENT and full of stars, the awful heaven
Is looking down on slumber.
There is not
The breathing of a solitary breeze
Upon the cheek of winter. It is still
As when the shapeless attributes of earth
Slept in the night of chaos, and the wings
Of a most heavy darkness hung upon
The unformed solitude. The trees stand up
Without the show of motion, and the stars
And the uprising of the holy moon
Make visible the silvering of frost
Among their naked boughs. Even the tall grass
Around their trunks is flashing, like the spears
Of fairy multitudes. The snowy tops
Of all the hills are quivering with gems—
The jewelry of winter.

I have gazed
Upon the things around me until all
The grossness of reality is gone,
And I can feed my fancy with the thought
Of a most glorious vision. I can cast
The veil of earth aside and send my gaze
Into the land of fairy and look through
Groves of unearthly beauty. I can see
The golden pillars and the fretted roof
Of wizard palaces, the grottoes where
The elfin spirits of the unseen world—
The winged and mysterious messengers
From the far land of spirits—shake their plumes
And white wings in the moonlight. I can tread
The jeweled pathway, where a magic wand
Hath changed the unseemly pebble to a gem—
The gray sand into gold.

There cannot be
A vision lovelier in the flowery time
Of the revealing spring nor in the sun
And glory of the summer. It is as
The blissful paradise of Yemen's song—
The flowery gardens of enchanted Gul.

—John Greenleaf Whittier.

FROM "THE POET."

THE gods talk in the breath of the woods,
They talk in the shaken pine
And fill the long reach of the old seashore
With dialogue divine.
And the poet who overhears
Some random word they say
Is the fated man of men
Whom the ages must obey.

—Emerson.

WINTER TIME.

LATE lies the wintry sun abed,
A frosty, fiery sleepy head;
Blinks but an hour or two and then,
A blood red orange, sets again.

BEFORE the stars have left the skies
At morning in the dark I rise
And, shivering in my nakedness,
By the cold candle, bathe and dress.

CLOSE by the jolly fire I sit
To warm my frozen bones a bit
Or, with a reindeer sled, explore
The colder countries round the door.

WHEN to go out my nurse doth wrap
Me in my comforter and cap
The cold wind burns my face and blows
Its frosty pepper up my nose.

BLACK are my steps on silver sod,
Thick blows my frosty breath abroad,
And tree and house and hill and lake
Are frosted like a wedding cake.

—Robert Louis Stevenson.

THE LOOK.

LOOK up and not down. There is never a crown
In the dust and debris of the street.
The God who doth love us hath hung high above us
The crown that makes glory complete.

FACE the east, not the west. You are not at your best
With your eyes set on stars sinking low,
But each rising star's ray, with its promise of day,
Will kindle your heart to a glow.

—Alexander Blackburn.

A WAYSIDE GRAVE.

OUR upland journey wound its way
Past hills that wore the green of May.

The dogwood starred the shadowy copse;
The light breeze rocked the pine tree tops

Far off we saw the village spires
And fluttering smoke of household fires.

But here of voice or tool no sound
Fell on the cloistered hush profound.

Sudden I drew my bridle rein,
Dim, shining out from moss and stain.

Alone amid a fallow field
And half by brier and weed concealed.

I saw a rough stone cross that bore
One little dear home name; no more.

Some heart had ached, some house had known
The desolate hunger for its own.

When hollowed out this narrow grave,
They laid, whom love had died to save.

But could not, one whose name had been
To her own people "Josephine."

A ruined chimney and the bloom
Of a pale purple lilac plume

Close by, and this small wayside cross
Told all, the tale of love and loss,

While near and far the frangrant day
Was golden glimmering with May.

—Margaret Sangster.

AT THE DOOR.

I THOUGHT myself indeed secure,
So fast the door, so firm the lock;
But, lo, he toddling comes to lure
My parent ear with timorous knock.

My heart were stone could I withstand
The sweetness of my baby's plea,
That timorous, baby knocking and,
"Please let me in; it's only me."

I threw aside the unfinished book
Regardless of its tempting charms,
And, opening wide the door, I took
My laughing darling in my arms.

Who knows but in eternity
I, like the truant child, shall wait,
The glories of a life to be
Beyond the Heavenly Father's gate?

And will that Heavenly Father heed
The truant's supplicating cry
As at the outer door I plead,
"'Tis I, O Father, only I?"

—Eugene Field.

Summons

INFANT WORKERS.

Child Labor In Southern Oyster Canneries.

LONG HOURS FOR SHUCKERS.

Hundreds of Children Toil All Day For a Mere Pittance—Lack of Laws or Inadequate Enforcement Responsible. Parents Indifferent.

A vivid account of child labor in southern oyster and shrimp canneries—an industry with which it is not usually associated in the public mind—is given by Lewis W. Hine in the Survey. In some states legislation is now pending to eliminate this exploitation of children. Others already have laws, but without adequate enforcement. Mr. Hine says:

"The wages of these workers vary according to their locality and the kind of season they find. The work on the shrimp is better paid than oyster shucking, but it is much more irregular. On the latter families frequently earn $10 and $15 or $20 a week, so when there are several children and the work is steady there is a great temptation to make them all help.

"Children of seven years earn about 25 cents a day and at eight and ten years often 50 cents a day or more. At twelve and fourteen years they frequently earn as high as a dollar a day, and this is adult pay. The fastest adult shucker seldom earns much more than a dollar a day after years of experience. What, then, is the outlook for children beginning this industry?

"'What is your name, little girl?'

"'Dunno.'

"'How old are you?'

"'Dunno.'

"'How many pots do you shuck in a day?'

"'Dunno.'

"And the pity of it is that they do not know.

"What then do they know? Enough to stand patiently with the rest picking up one hard, dirty cluster of shells, deftly prying them open, dropping the meat into the pot, and then go through this process with another and another until after many minutes the pot is full—a relief, for they carry it over to the weigher and rest, doing nothing for a minute, and walk back, such a change from the dreary standing, reaching, prying and dropping, minute upon minute, hour upon hour, day upon day, month after month, or, perchance, for variety, the catch may have been shrimp, and then the hours of work are shorter, but the shrimp are icy cold, and the blood in one's fingers congeals, and the fingers become so sore that she welcomes the oysters again.

"Are you surprised then to find that many children seem dumb and cannot understand our language?

"Come out with me to one of these canneries at 3 o'clock some morning. Here is the crude, shedlike building, with a long dock at which the oyster boats unload their cargoes. Near the dock is the ever present shell pile, a monument of mute testimony to the patient toil of little fingers. It is cold, damp, dark. The whistle blew some time ago, and the young workers slipped into their meager garments, snatched a bite to eat and hurried to the shucking shed. The padrone told me 'ef dey don't git up I go and git 'em up!' Boys and girls, six, seven and eight years of age, take their places with the adults and work all day.

"The cars are ready for them with their loads of dirty, rough clusters of shells, and as these shells accumulate under foot in irregular piles they soon make the mere matter of standing one of physical stain. Notice the uncertain footing and the dilapidated footwear of that little girl, and opposite is one with cloth fingers to protect herself from the jagged shells. They call them 'finger stalls.' Their fingers are often sore in spite of this precaution.

"Now, we all know that the amount of work these little ones can do is not much, and yet I have been surprised and horrified at the number of hours a day a six or seven year old will stay at work, and this with the willing and eager consent of the parents. 'Freckled Bill,' a bright lad of five years, told me that he worked, and his mother added reproachfully:

"'He kin make 15 cents any day he wants to work, but he won't do it steady.'

"Hundreds of these children from four to twelve years of age are regularly employed, often as helpers, for the greater part of the six months if it is a good season. At three and four years of age they play around and help a little, 'learnin' de trade.' At five and six years of age they work more regularly, and at seven and eight years they put in long hours every working day. This is the regular program for these children day after day, week after week, for the six months of their alleged 'outing down south.'"

Unionism Grows In Georgia.

Since the last annual gathering of the Georgia Federation of Labor one year ago in Waycross, when twenty-three affiliations, the largest ever known in the entire south for one year, were enrolled, fifty additional affiliations have been added.

Result of Organization.

Kingston (Canada) branch of the Journeymen Stone Cutters of North America was organized in 1900, and since that time the wage scale has been advanced from $3 per day of ten hours to $4 per day of eight hours.

UNIONISM PAYS.

The labor union procures for the wage earner higher wages, shorter hours, healthier conditions of labor. It affords him an opportunity of seeking a better livelihood, and a man of family it assists materially in discharging that greatest of all duties, the proper education of his children. It has been an instrument of progress, not to speak of the material advantages it has gained for its members, and has developed powerful sympathies among them and has also taught them the lesson of self sacrifice in the interest of their brethren. Some of the best men of today have been brought to the front by this instrumentality. From its ranks are drawn representatives of the church, state and country.

There is not a fair minded wage earner who, if he will take the time to consider the advantages to be gained by belonging to a labor union, would hesitate on what course to pursue. The union does not interfere with the religious or political beliefs of any person, but assists in the maintenance of the just and equitable rights of the individual and tends to cement the bonds of friendship and brotherhood which should exist between all men. In a word:

"It pays to be a union man."

ENEMY OF INJUSTICE.

What the American Federation of Labor Has Done For Humanity.

The opponents of the American labor movement as directed by the American Federation of Labor have abused and slandered it with bitterness and venom. They have accused its leading officials of almost every species of wrongdoing and crime. The organization has, for the most part, ignored its defamers and gone on in its career of steady and increasing success, animated only by a great desire to achieve the greatest good for the greatest number, and it has been all along accomplishing its righteous and lofty purposes until now it has grown so strong that it can disdain the small faultfinders and defy the greatest of them.

What is the cause of its unbroken progress and mighty growth? It is to be found in the fact that it was born of human needs, has ministered to human well being, has devoted all its energies to uplifting humanity. It has shielded the weak, restrained the strong and fought injustice and wrong in high places. It has never held any but harmless secrets and never worked for any but useful ends. Its great mission has been to improve the condition of the toilers of the land, protect them from wrong, make their homes better and happier places for themselves and their families. It has stretched its strong arm out as a help to women and children who are forced to work for a livelihood and bring about by constant and arduous efforts higher standards of living, greater comfort and freedom from care and more hope, enjoyment and opportunity for them.

The American Federation of Labor has made human life, especially that of the humble and helpless, its great solicitude. It has been an intensely human and humane institution, with all its aspirations based on the genuine advancement of the common people of the country and all of its activities devoted to that. For the promotion of that it has sought more progressive legislation and secured a large measure of it, and it has never stayed its hand or abated its labors where there has been a need to provide for. These are the reasons for its wonderful vigor, its countless triumphs and its always strengthening hold on the regard of the American people. — Minnesota Union Advocate.

Negro Delegate at Labor Convention.

For the first time in the history of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Tin and Steel Workers a negro occupied a seat as delegate at the national convention recently in session at Fort Wayne, Ind. He is Edward Harris of Covington, Ky. The Amalgamated Association of Iron, Tin and Steel Workers practically doubled its membership during the last year, according to the president's report. A substantial increase in wages will be asked.

Employers Held Liable.

The constitutionality of the Indiana employers' liability law has been upheld by the supreme court of the United States in the suit of Haynes L. Hackett against the Chicago, Indianapolis and Louisville Railway company. Hackett, a yard switchman at Monon, Ind., will get $30,000 for the loss of both legs.

Wages of London Bricklayers.

The Operative Bricklayers' society of London has signed a fresh agreement with the Master Builders' association for an advance in wages of a cent an hour, which went into operation on May 17, and a further cent is to go into operation six months from that date, when the rate of pay will be 23 cents an hour.

Increase For Railway Men.

Increase in wages for approximately 10,000 shop men employed on the Southern railroad and allied lines in the southern states has been granted by the railroads concerned, according to an announcement from the headquarters of the International Union of Railway Carmen at Kansas City.

Woman's World

Mrs. Alice Harriman
Only Woman Publisher.

MRS. ALICE HARRIMAN.

If your capital did not exceed $325 would you venture it all upon the publication of a book of verse?

If "look before you leap" is your rule of life you probably wouldn't, but Mrs. Alice Harriman, the woman who did, lives up to the theory that "nothing ventured is nothing gained."

Mrs. Harriman, by the way, was a Seattle woman by adoption and is naturally imbued with the venturesome spirit of the great northwest, so when she decided to put out a volume of verse, "Songs o' the Sound," at her own expense her friends were fearful of success, but not surprised at the daring move.

This little volume, which appeared in a dress to attract tourists, was conspicuously displayed in all the bookstores of "the Puget sound country" and in less than ten days paid for itself and justified the author's business sixth sense, a sense she had evidently lived without up to this time.

Indeed, Mrs. Harriman was utterly ignorant of the simplest business methods when she started out. Yet in five years, alone and entirely unaided, she has built up a publishing business of sufficient importance to straddle the continent, for the Alice Harriman Publishing company has offices both in New York city and in Seattle.

The business really started in the following way: "The Songs o' the Sound" caught the eye of a wealthy and influential woman of Seattle, who asked Mrs. Harriman to publish memoirs of her father, a man of political importance and "the father of Seattle." Although ignorant of the first principles of the technical part of publishing, she consented. By studying books brought out by the big publishing houses she was able to pattern her book upon them. These memoirs gave Mrs. Harriman her first real piece of business, and the venture was so successful that other books were offered her for publication. But the publication that was most influential in determining her success was one that other publishers had fought shy of—a French translation made by Lafcadio Hearn.

Now, with the exception of her secretarial staff, Mrs. Harriman is the whole publishing outfit. She designs covers, wrappers, circulars and does the "makeup" and whatever other part of the profession demanding individual attention. Then she turns the manuscripts over to the printer and binder.

Mrs. Harriman confesses that she does not belong to the domestic type of woman, and, although she could mix a salad or bake good bread, she would be utterly incapable of turning out a sartorial confection on the slit skirt order. She prides herself upon being womanly for a' that. She would "rather write a poem than pay a visit."

"A business woman," Mrs. Harriman says, "does not have to wear mannish clothes, affect men's walk or men's language or manners." There is no reason why a woman to be successful in the business world should be "one of the boys." What a woman does need is a love of and devotion to her work, and to this devotion Mrs. Harriman attributes her success in a field not hitherto entered by woman.

Mrs. Harriman, too, is unlike her sisters in another respect—she has no feeling whatever about telling her age. Indeed, she frankly and fearlessly admits that she had never published a line or thought of bringing out anybody's ideas in book form until she had reached her forty-fifth year. Mrs. Harriman has been in business five years. The rest is plain sailing.

The Latest Slang.

When a fresh, pretty young girl replies to your inquiry as to whether a certain dance was a success or a certain young man agreeable with "Oh, perfectly fine!" or "Simply great!" you find yourself wishing she would drop the vernacular and use good English. But when some one tells you that your new hat is "snappy" and a debutante enthusiastically says that you gave a "won-der-ful party," accent on the first syllable, you smile indulgently and your sensibilities are not jarred. Slang goes out of fashion, and nothing is more stale and dreary than last year's slang. But the latest additions to the vocabulary always seem to fill a long felt want, so "simply great" and "fine" have gone their way to oblivion, while "snappy" and "wonderful" have come to stay—a little while.

Good Form

Announcement Cards.

When a marriage has been celebrated quietly before the immediate family or just a few friends announcement cards are sent to inform others of the ceremony. These are in several forms, the following being the accepted style:

Mr. and Mrs. John Gray announce the marriage of their daughter
Alice
to
Mr. Andrew Hall
On Friday, June the sixth,
Nineteen hundred and thirteen,
Saint Mary's Church,
New York.

Often a large visiting card of the bride and groom is inclosed with an announcement. This has the address of the new home and the day at home of the bride.

If there are no relatives to issue an announcement the news can come directly from the happy pair in this manner:

Mr. Andrew Hall
and
Miss Alice Gray
announce their marriage on Friday, June the sixth,
Nineteen hundred and thirteen,
at
Saint Mary's Church,
New York.

Now a few words about recalling wedding invitations. Illness, death or, alas, disagreement between the engaged ones which results in a broken engagement sometimes makes it necessary to recall invitations. Fortunately orders can be filled in a very short time by first class engravers, who are prepared for these events. To every one on the list of names who has been honored with an invitation should be sent a card a little larger than a correspondence card with a message which can be worded like this:

Owing to the sudden death of Mr. John Gray's father, Mr. and Mrs. John Gray beg to recall the cards issued for their daughter's wedding.

Announcement cards require no acknowledgment. Persons who observe strictly the receipt of cards call on the parents, who are the host and hostess, within two weeks of the notice of the wedding. A very gracious thing is the sending to the bride or groom a little note of congratulation. The posting of a visiting card to either one or to both with a phrase expressing sincere good wishes is also correct.

Announcement cards need not be acknowledged by gifts. Your familiarity and wish in this matter should decide. No married couple wish to be interpreted as bidding for presents when they announce their marriage. It is foolish and uncalled for to send a gift when only a slight acquaintance exists. Your sincere good wishes should go with the gift. Without them the most expensive present is worthless.

Letters of Introduction.

Writing a letter of introduction is a task that falls more often to a man than to a woman, but there comes a time in the life of almost every woman when such a letter is a necessity. Perhaps she wants to give it to a friend who is going to a distant city or to a cousin or other relative. But just here a word of caution is necessary—don't be too lavish in giving these letters. Most people are averse to having strangers introduced to them by mere acquaintances. Don't address such letters to any one but intimate friends or give them to Tom, Dick and Harry.

A letter of introduction should be short and straight to the point. Something like this is all that is necessary:

My Dear Mrs. Smith—This letter will introduce to you Miss Dorothy Clark, who is going to spend a month or two in Colorado Springs. She is an intimate friend of mine, and as I want all the people I am very fond of to meet her I am sending her to you.

Any little attention you may extend to her will be gratefully appreciated by me. Cordially yours, MARY BROWN.

Letters of introduction should never be sealed by the person giving them, and if they are not business letters, but simply friendly letters like the foregoing, they are rarely delivered in person, but sealed and sent by the recipient to the man or woman to whom they are addressed together with the card of the recipient on which is written the address of the house where she is stopping. And if you should receive such a letter of introduction from a friend you must call without delay upon the person introduced to you by letter.

Notes of Condolence.

Unfortunately it falls to the lot of all of us to have to write letters of condolence occasionally. And even people with the warmest hearts in the world often dread this duty extremely and, putting it off to the last possible moment, sometimes turn out a stiff and stilted note that inadvertently wounds those whom they intended to comfort.

Letters of condolence should be short and simple. Almost all one can say at such a time is to let the friend know that one is deeply sorry and feels for her in her grief. Don't harrow already overwrought feelings by too familiar allusions to the deceased. Such a letter should always be sent shortly after the funeral has taken place. Letters of condolence must be answered by the recipient or by some relative or friend who kindly undertakes the task for the bereaved one.

A Story of Fate

Cupid Plays Odd Pranks

By CLARISSA MACKIE

The first day of spring was warm and bright, with a faint mist of green over the trees and shrubs in Linda Greer's garden.

"I never knew such a forward spring," mused Linda as she shook her duster out of the sitting room door. "The yellow bush is in bloom, and I smelled violets down in the orchard this morning. I wish—I wish I didn't have to enjoy everything alone!"

She looked wistfully down the straight aisles between the apple trees in the tiny orchard. Robins tripped jauntily over the short green grass, and bluebirds were flashing around the fences.

All the rare promise of spring was in the air, a promise that the summer would fulfill with its mated birds and blossoming flowers and ripening fruit.

Linda sighed a little and closed the glass door regretfully.

It was sad to be alone—the last of a large family and without one congenial friend to share her delight in birds and flowers and trees.

A tall, thin form came slowly down the long, hilly street and passed Linda's house. It stopped a moment and leaned over the fence to admire the daffodils and crocuses which made a circle of purple and gold about the old house, then passed on with studious head bent above a book.

Linda blushed like a girl and leaned dizzily against the window frame.

After a little while she roused herself and flew indignantly about her neglected tasks.

"Linda Greer, you're the biggest fool," she scolded herself roundly. "Here you are forty-five years old tomorrow and fluttering like a goose every time James Irving walks past the house!

"As if he hadn't been walking past the house twice a day for the last fifteen years! 'Tisn't likely he could get to and from his office without going by here, and yet—you're always a-fluttering, a-fluttering"—

Linda viciously thumped a teacup into the china cupboard, and to her dismay it splintered into fragments. While she was removing the debris a timid knock sounded at the kitchen door.

JAMES IRVING'S SHYNESS VANISHED.

"Here's the mail, Miss Linda," said little Berton Sawyer when she appeared at the door.

"Thank you, Berton; here's your penny," said Linda kindly, supplementing the penny with a seed cooky.

When Benny had crunched along the graveled path out of sight Linda sat down by the glass door in the sitting room and looked at the weekly paper.

A couple of letters lay in her lap, but she did not look at them. They were doubtless circulars from some advertising firm. Glendale folks received many such.

When she had scanned the village news Linda put the paper aside for a more careful perusal and picked up her letters.

One was from a manufacturer of washing machines, and Linda threw it into the wastebasket.

The other was in a plain envelope and directed in a strong masculine hand.

With puzzled eyes Linda opened the missive and read it with reddening cheeks and wildly beating heart. She read it a second and a third time, and then it fell fluttering into her lap.

"Well, I never!" she gasped, covering her face with her hands.

Glendale, April 1, 1908.

Dear Miss Linda—I have long cherished the deepest affection for you, and I will never be really happy until you say you will marry me at once. Will you answer this so I can hear from you in this evening's mail? Respectfully yours,

JAMES IRVING.

So read the letter which Linda Greer received on that spring morning.

* * * * * * *

James Irving had come to the village when Linda Greer had passed the boundary between young ladyhood and old maid, while he had passed middle age. He lived the life of a recluse not from choice, but because he had no taste for the trifles that absorb boys and girls.

He had met Linda soon after his arrival and had been attracted by her. Had his affairs been in a state to warrant marriage he might have permitted himself to visit her often, but he was poor, and being well aware that any attention a man of his age might pay a single woman would cause remark he was constrained to do what looked to Linda like avoiding her.

Had she not noticed in him a liking for her she would have considered his keeping away from her simply as a mark of indifference. As it was, the evidence of his good will in one respect and his action in not cultivating a friendship between him and her puzzled her. She could never make up her mind what to think of his treatment of her.

A dozen years passed, at the end of which Irving was beginning to feel that life without a home was scarcely worth living. At this time his affairs began to pick up, and within another year or two he had accumulated enough to own a house. This was his condition at the time Linda Greer received the letter containing a proposition of marriage.

* * * * * * *

James Irving closed his desk and put on his hat. He bundled together some documents and tied them up with a red tape and placed them in his safe.

He locked the door of his dusty law office and made his way down into the street.

A little crowd in front of the postoffice denoted that the evening mail was in, and groups of giggling girls and smart youths watched Mr. Irving as he opened his letter box and took therefrom a number of letters.

Thrusting them into his coat pocket, he took his slow way homeward to his boarding place. He paused a moment for another glance at Miss Linda's garden, and he did not see her tender eyes beaming at him from behind the parlor blind.

Up in his quiet room he sat down by the window and opened his letters.

Two of them pertained to business, several were from old friends in distant cities, and the last one was a small envelope addressed in a prim, ladylike hand with faded ink.

A faint, delicate perfume as of dried rose leaves assailed his nostrils as he carefully opened the letter:

Glendale, April 1, 1908.

Dear Mr. Irving—I received your note this morning. You press me for an immediate answer to your proposal of marriage. I have never dreamed that you cared for me at all, but I will say that my answer will be what you wished me to say. Yours truly,

LINDA GREER.

Mr. Irving read this letter with manifest astonishment. His eyes were distended with surprise and unbelief, and a flush of anger overspread his fine features.

"A scurrilous trick on somebody's part," he muttered fiercely as he scanned the letter for the third time. Then he relapsed into deep thought.

He wondered who could have insulted the gentle little lady by forging her name to such a letter. Some village wit, doubtless, had conceived the coarse jest. He hoped that Miss Linda would not hear of it.

As he dressed for supper a sudden thought assailed him. Was it possible that some joker had forged his name to a proposal of marriage to Miss Linda and she had taken the matter seriously and that this letter was really from her?

He turned hot and cold at the bare thought. He would go and see Linda Greer, and perhaps he might gain some clew as to what had really occurred. It was a delicate matter—a very delicate matter.

He finished dressing, and without waiting for supper he made his way down the village street in the sweet April dusk and opened Linda's garden gate.

He walked slowly up the path, inhaling the spring odors of garden and field, and turned around to the side door.

This was the first time he had ever entered that garden, but for years he had stood afar, wistfully gazing at the one woman in the world for him and whom his poverty had prevented him from seeking out.

As he mounted the steps to the porch the door opened hurriedly, and Linda Greer precipitated herself out of the entrance.

"Oh, you!" she breathed hurriedly. "Did you receive a letter from me?" she asked, with a certain fierce excitement which sat strangely upon her.

"I—I believe I did," stammered James Irving, taken aback by her sudden question.

"I want it back again!" she cried fiercely. "It was a mistake. Hulda Lansing has just been here"—she paused and choked down a little sob—"and she says it was a trick of some of the girls and boys. Oh, oh!"

Linda broke into angry sobs, and in a trice James Irving's shyness vanished, never to return.

He took Linda into his warm embrace and kissed the top of her brown head with tender, lingering touch.

"Don't you believe one word that Hulda Lansing says," he soothed gently. "You are the only woman I ever loved, Linda, and your answer to my letter has made me the happiest man in the world."

"Your letter!" murmured Linda amazedly.

James Irving lied without a tremor of conscience.

"My proposal of marriage was genuine," he said gravely. "I have loved you for years, and you will not keep me waiting long, dear?"

"No," sighed Linda happily.

NOTABLES IN THE LIMELIGHT

George W. Guthrie, New Ambassador to Japan.

George W. Guthrie, Uncle Sam's new ambassador to Japan, assumes his duties under rather onerous conditions. The feeling aroused in the mikado's dominions by the passage of the alien land law in California will require skillful handling to allay, and until the matter is definitely settled Mr. Guthrie will have little time for play. He was originally slated for the Mexico portfolio, but conditions in that country did not warrant an immediate change of ambassadors.

The new ambassador to Japan was formerly mayor of Pittsburgh and at the time of his appointment was chairman of the Pennsylvania Democratic state committee. He is a native of Pittsburgh, a lawyer by profession and is sixty-five years old. For many years he has been active politically in state and national affairs and in 1876 was associate counsel of the Tilden electors before the Florida returning board. Elected chief executive of Pittsburgh in 1906, he proceeded to clean up things. During his term of three years as mayor Mr. Guthrie eliminated political bosses and conducted his administration on the merit system. City employees learned that retention of their places depended alone on faithful work and that political services counted for nothing. He also reorganized and purified the police force, which was in a demoralized condition. Ambassador Guthrie has been a well known figure at national Democratic conventions and in 1902 was candidate for lieutenant governor of his state.

Secretary Redfield's Stand.

Secretary of Commerce William C. Redfield, who recently warned manufacturers that it may "become the duty of the department of commerce to inquire into their business methods if they throw workmen out of jobs, reduce wages or extend working hours," denies that he made threats. "I want to help, not to injure, manufacturers," he said.

Mr. Redfield can investigate, find the facts and make public the results of his inquiry. If he finds that an arbitrary reduction has been made in wages he can so find and publish. Some states have laws against the arbitary reduction of wages. The findings of the department of commerce would be valuable in suits brought under such state laws.

WILLIAM C. REDFIELD.

If an investigation reveals the fact that there has been a conspiracy or combination in restraint of trade the Sherman anti-trust law can be invoked.

Mr. Redfield is a native of Albany, N. Y., was educated in Pittsfield, Mass., and has lived in Brooklyn since 1883. He is engaged in the iron manufacturing business and is a large employer of labor. He was elected to the Sixty-second congress and figured in several important tariff debates in the house and is regarded by the Democrats as an expert on the subject. He is fifty-five years old.

TWO LADIES AND A BRACELET

Experience of a Missouri Man In London Society.

Zeke Jenks, a native of Missouri, at twenty years of age lost his father and gained thereby a farm. Not finding the state big enough for him, he sold his farm and went to Texas, where he invested the proceeds in oil territory, of which the Octopus Oil company kindly relieved him for a consideration. Zeke took the consideration to New York, where he became a great stock and cotton speculator and by the time he was thirty was worth so many millions that he didn't know what to do with them.

Meanwhile Zeke, having determined to see something besides his own country, went to London, where he kept house in fine style. Having made the acquaintance of several impecunious noblemen who gave him introductions (for consideration), it was not long before he found himself a member of the celebrated smart set headed by the king of England. Certain professional beauties of the British capital, without stopping to consider the origin of his accumulations, proceeded to lay plans to transfer as much of them as possible to themselves.

Among the reigning belles of that season—married belles, not young ladies; the belles of London usually are encumbered with husbands—was Lady Arabella Richmond. Twenty years before her mother had been so favorably noticed by the king as to be unfavorably noticed by some of the puritanical families of England. Lady Arabella had inherited a number of splendid jewels, and when she wished to crush a rising rival would put them all on at some aristocratic function.

But unfortunately, the beauty's expenditures being greater than her income, she was obliged now and again to sacrifice a gem, and at the time Zeke Jenks appeared on the London social stage she had reached a point where her stock of jewels needed replenishing. Indeed, without certain additions her supremacy was in danger. She was among the first to take up "that unique American, Mr. Jenks," who by this time was the talk of the town. Furthermore, a rival had appeared from the American colony in the person of Miss Lillian Lee, a native of Maryland, whose beauty, delightful manners and naturally amiable disposition were slowly making her a favorite. Notwithstanding these advantages Miss Lee could not have rivaled the highborn Lady Richmond had not the latter reached an age where even cosmetics failed to preserve her beauty. The charm of the whole matter was that Miss Lee did not seek to rival any one and was unconscious that certain prophets were whispering that she would soon be at the head of the reigning belles.

It was at this time that Lady Arabella was winding her tentacles about Zeke Jenks. He had been growing more and more devoted and gave every evidence that he was not only enraptured with the position he occupied before the London social world, but with Lady Richmond herself. One day he called upon her at the hour for afternoon tea to ask a favor.

Desiring, he said, to make some acknowledgment to a lady of high social standing who had graciously accepted his attentions, he asked Lady Richmond to name a gift that would be acceptable. It being obvious that Lady Richmond herself was to be the recipient, she eagerly consented. She was, however, a trifle surprised at Mr. Jenks giving her a limit of £5,000. At the end of a week's inspection the lady gave a jeweler an order to send a bracelet set with a single diamond to the American with the bill, which amounted to the limit he had given her. Then she waited to receive the gift from Mr. Jenks, hoping it would come in time for a function to take place at Buckingham palace, where she expected to meet the "chit from America," as she called Miss Lee, and to blind her with the sparkle of the new gem.

But the gift came not, and the queen of the belles was obliged to go to the palace without it. What was her chagrin to see it on the wrist of Miss Lee! Lady Richmond, after saluting the king and queen, retired and never again appeared as the reigning beauty. The next day she read in a society paper the announcement of the engagement of the two Americans, Mr. Ezekiel Jenks and Miss Lillian Lee.

Zeke Jenks married Miss Lee in the early springtime and instead of seeking further social preferment at the British capital went off to Egypt without even saying goodby to a number of persons to whom the husband at least owed his elevation. But, having paid well for what he had received, he did not consider any farewell necessary.

Before the next London season came on Lord and Lady Richmond appeared in the divorce courts. One of the charges against the wife was that she had sunk £1,000 in a bracelet which she had never received. It came out that when Zeke Jenks had asked her to select a gift, supposing it was for her, being limited to £5,000 and coveting a bracelet worth £6,000, she had directed the jeweler to send it to Mr. Jenks with a bill for £5,000, charging her with the remaining £1,000. The Londoners found this item more delicious than certain scandalous features connected with the trial.

Meanwhile Mr. and Mrs. Jenks were on the ocean returning to America.
